

Robert Chen

Robert Chen helps high-performers find the difference that makes the difference.

As a communication skills consultant with Exec|Comm, he leverages his business, science and cross-cultural background to help:

- global leaders clarify their message and communicate with executive presence
- client-facing professionals grow their business by building authentic relationships
- technical experts present their data in more compelling ways to engage a broader audience

He's worked with top firms in management consulting, accounting, banking and financial services, wealth management, insurance, digital media and academia.

Fascinated by high performance and fueled by his passion for continuous improvement, Robert founded Embrace Possibility where he guides his clients to reach their full potential through his writing and life coaching.

Robert began his career as an equities trader for six years and then sharpened his skills in both business management and the Chinese language when he moved to China to work for a multinational manufacturing company. After returning to the US, Robert pursued his passion for coaching, training and curriculum design as a corporate trainer for a health insurance company.

Robert graduated from Cornell University with a double major in Chemistry and Economics and a concentration in East Asian Studies. He lives in New York.
